By WILLIAM HENRY BIS 70P. Conversitived by J. B. Lippinsett Campany, This satelphia, and published through special arrangement with them \( \)

The whole was disguised as before, purporting to be only an account, by one Ignacio Gomes, or what had happened in the anniest land of Cibols.

There were two things in the railey that greatly affected the imagination of Walter. The one, which as it came to nothing, may first be briefly dismissed was the question, what had become of all the deposit of the guiden suring in time gone by? Pressing almost unwarrantably close to the boiling stream it defiance of the fierce heat, be found as ancient inscription on one of a sumber of great stones that seemed to have been tumbled into it, as it were, above its very source. Ferhaps these stones had come. of great stones that seemed to have been tumbled into it, as it were, above its very source. Perhaps these stomes half completers not by accident but design. The stream rose in its greatest strength from numericalists beneath tham, being been down by them like a stout aspling, and thus farced over to impings violently or the rock where othe Yellow finals leaped forth. They certainly changed its course What if the accumulation of treasure did not lie deep ir the bowels of the search but only in the bed of this stream, which had been turner over it by those who would preserve the secret from the general eye? And they, heathen priests or whoever they might have been what had become of them—if his factiful, sur mise was right—that the secret was forti. But that was now out of the reach of any human divinstice.

Walter Arraye continually regarded the stones with tentalised and hungry eye, but to displace them was beyond the force at his disposal and then, too could he command the mechanism and materials for the powerful asplication necessary to bring about such a result, the effect upon the present source, of supply must be greatly dreaded. The shock might disturb an equilibrium in doubt very delicate, and so put an end to the goose that had the golden eng. He had observed that the flow was freer on days of low begoinster, and the fact gave credibility to his surmiss.

These ideas were greated to him whenever he were sear the source. In his fe-

Very cautiously, very delinately, he removed a shall portion of the rook, and slightly enlarged the opening. Again, and yet again, he broke off with his hammer and short drill some further portions of the rack. It was apparent it would stand even more. He stand the constant manners with the same dallocor, using a long operator, and this had a 'most excellent effect; the stream still expended to its increased op-portunities. Visions of a speedy out to the rest of his actions task swam, before the warm fancy of the experiments. The second half a very small, inclinative blass with power might be trad.

Als, heaven who could have formed, who could have believed cradible, at hideously painful a result? The flow cased instantly, shoundly, and no subsequent edicate could recover it. The goose that laid the go den egg was sight indeed, and by Walber's own hand.

At first he felt that only some tangular regiment fragment has blocked the pay, which o'uld easily be removed, but, he classed away the debuts without result. Then with breathless, increasing haste he began to work—with short o'rill sidlong drill, with mattock and pick. He satisfy, the farmy of coming despair. Here tooks would not language, but he would still reach back to where the elective golden stream had hidden its hear. So he fired blast after blast in increasing quantities till most of the pock was shared the place was sharped.

With the apparents he had prepared as got to windward of the fame, and descended one of the steep, rudky alops of the crater. Here was a sort of terrace, or narrow ledge of black and learny soil, like dried up mud, within which, at in a vest black melting pot, and at a lower level, was the hallash, seething broth that he would test.

He proceeded to let cown an earther far made fast with an uron them. The budget struck the surface, filled and cis appeared. Walter attempted to pull to up on the instant, but the insundancean food had already melted off budget and iron chain, the latter as far as its farychape had reached, and he stangered hads with only a uscless remnant of the chain in his hand.

"What shall I do next?" he demanded the bathought three of his arbestos with which he had had in other ways or smoomful an experience. He procured: a sort of the ways of smoomful an experience.

with which he had had in other ways as successful an experience. He produced a new supply of it, constructed a sort of cipper box of this firegroof material, and also twisted a rope of the films to be at tached to it. Thus propared, he returned to the orater another day. He let down the asbestos bucket and scoured the speed men he wanted. But, after all this, it proved to be only lave, differing but, little from what lay about him on every hand.

This was his last resort. He might be said to return from it like another Orpheus returning from Hades, for, in his consciousness of failure, he, too, seemed to leave behind him the dear Emrydiet who had been his promised reward. His own danger had been great throughout, but he made nothing, of that. Ferhaps he would not have eased overmuch it fate had there seen fit to put an end to his existence after so miserably balking his plane.

There was every reason to believe the all was now at an end, and nothing more remained for him to do in the Barrance. He had only to score what he had and invent that plan for getting it out of the country which he had, so long kept is aboyance. Consolatory mental voice tried to persuade him that even his present success was not to be despised; but he would have nine of this.

"To give headingme millions that no

"To give back some millions that no body had expected might be thought to have a fine effect," he said, "but there would still remain people to when other millions were due. How could I hold up my head and take the world in a hold fashion so far as they are concerned. No, it would only be said that a part of the robbery had been made good by way of a compromise with considerate for of a compromise with conscience to the robbery had been made good by way of a compromise with conscience to keeping the rest. It would never be believed that case who had so much had not the whole."

Those reflections, quinotic, perhaps from the shrewd, prohical point of view, may have sided his reluctance to leave so hard fought a field. He could not best to go so it up. A pertinances obstimated and linguing hope keept continually springing to life even now.

"What if I go to one of the larger cities, oven as fax as liferito," he said, "get a new supply and better blasting makes rial, return, and try again? This dynamite, of which they fall so much lately, would, no doubt, said my purpose here with planty of good explorives I will shatter every stone in the place, if necessary, till I come to the Tallow Shaka and then I can look for the lost deposit, too, without harting any other interest. So can his final decision. Every day nutil now be had sent the message of his safety to Amy by the spring. With what suffering the dumb current would have conveyed his own bestings, in these latter days, to her! But for a wishel the signal must be shandoned. The tiltric perfid set for the exchange of letters had also come round. He determined, therefore, to stop on his way at Les Delicles, both on so count of the letters and to reassure Amy de to the cessetion of the signal and the beginning of his wanderings.

"Wee she well!" At first thought in tion of the signal and the heginning of his wanderings.

"Was she well?" As first thought is seemed almost abourd to fancy anything could happen to one so tenderly cared for in the midst of every luxury; all dangers, pisher, were reserved for his own lot. But he knew that pale death, with sickness and calamity as well, incolor or quality at regal paleoes and at the hovelt of the poor, and no small anxiety about her was added to the rum of all the others. His letter to her breathed, even though he tried to guard against it, a though he tried to guard against it, a sense of his discouragement, fatigut and uncertainty about the future. He heal-sted much as to whether he should put in the confession he had propered for her, but decided in the affirmative. West as remote?

All was made ready for departure; he left his belongings in as with a state as possible, and began to climb the craegy wooded path. Here, as once before, he met with an accident. A large atom rolled from its place under his touch and hore him down. It minued him to the easth, yet was stopped by soveril small changles from creaking him with the full weight. He manifed to extricate himself, but was in great-pain and unfil weight proceed.

"I food you all of it before," she said, "in the letter I left for you a long time, and then had to take back, because you did not come. How I tell you again, parhaps I shall have to take this back also. There is little to say about our quiet life; you could almost invent it all for yourself. But it may interest you to bear that our exemplary friend the Jefe Politico, Senne Don Tumas Corcoved, has formally proposed for the hand of Lux, and has been rejected. You would have learned it from my former letter, for it happened a good while ago. Senor Corcovedo has shown himself very indigness in consequence, and has tried to be disagnesable in various ways. I hear that he has let fall to the general grunnbling, half threatening expressions about people who are lukewarm in their de-bling, half threatening expressions about people who are lukawarm in their de-vestion to the government. But this surely could not have been intended for our dage general; for nobody is more truly patrions than he.

come to look, so often, and find nothing.

Am I wrong to be so oppressed and enrious?"

Walter replaced it with his organs on a former occasion, adding a few words to the effect that he would not go at once, but would try to wait about to receive some little further communication from her. He found the anment correl, that had been Trinided Jose's, described, and take refuge there for the night. There would have been an excellent view of the memorial cross, in the morning, from beind its low rambling walls, exceptibut a number of yellow straw stacks were scattered over the space between, the faces of some of them rudely employered, after a not unusual anatom, into hearedyles of some to them rudely employered, after a not unusual anatom, into hearedyles of some to them rudely employered, after a not unusual anatom, into hearedyles of some to the family about her. The children sported in advance, and with the alders among others was fister Beatrix. How his heart beat as Amy went by! He faucied, from his remotences, she looked pale. She leased on the arm of Senors del Prado, too, as if she were not very strong.

"Can it be in any degree on my abound?" he wondered. "If so, she is soon to be reasuared."

The company remained, an hour or mote—it was a pleasent rurel spot where they might well enough peas a little time, though it in no way compared with the garden—and then he wetched than on their return. As soon as the coast was entirely clear he abyped out, and, shielding himself behind one straw stack, after the other, destingly rinking detection, went and imposted the depository.

Nothing. He hid again in the corral,

Nothing. He hid again in the correl, hoping she might make another visit in the afternoon; but looking once more in the evening, and yet again in the morning, he stall found nothing. He shought ing, as real point nothing. He shought not been able be secrete an antique before her companions in the first instance, not to return alone in the so-ond. What was more natural? But now he could wait no longer. Another day at the course was not to be thought of.

Just as he was not to be thought of. Just as he was about to begin his de-tour of rewest he saw, issuing, from the principal gates of Las Delicias a numer-ous cavaloade. There were arried verv-ants commanded by the corporal, on prin-cipal berdensin, is man who were arred handbernhist about his based injuncil fashion and was wontro claim to be the distance and was decreased and the said

If it were a pilgrimage to ill Jamin on which they were bound, then let him turn back and pause a little in his vague plan. He discreetly followed their course, his wild in recodered to market him to passe skill in woodcraft standing him in good stend. Time was really no great object with him new; an opportunity would with him new; an opportunity would savely present itself, on such an exam-, see, to speak to her, and many things could be shitled by word of month which could not be by a fifth, enigments corre-

the modernia. It did not comest with the magnanismity of Amy to feel the jealousy that is said to be entertained by women who are rivals for the affections of the same man.

"Walter has traits to make him any woman's hero," she said; "he mites strength and courage with physical beauty, a generous heart, a frank and open character, and a considerate mature. He is aman such as all men ought to be when the race is perfected. What more natural than that she should feel so? Beadday, what claim have I to vaunt myself over her? We are both in the hands of Providence, which will dispose of us in its own good way."

They spoke of him no more, but it was plain to 2my whither her companion's funces often wandered.

The trying Jays came when the beam by the giass pavilion no longer bubbled as each one passed without the signal it was to Amy as if a definite perion of her vitality were daily subtracted. She would go many times in the day instead of one to see if it might not take place at some different hour. She got Trinidad Josa and the little children also to wroth the hasin for her, alleren also to

As often us she desired it safe, and oftener, too, for she forget her prudence in her auxisty, she went to the place of capout for letters.

"Her fate interests me and the walk is a change from the gardens, which cometunes seem too splendid, and there are plenty of maravilles (a pretty blue wild flower) there."

Amy could hardly forbear crying out, "He is deadt his bones are whitening in a terrible place! Or he is in danger, and nobody will help him, and I am to blame because I will not tell what I know!"

It was the tenth day since the beam held given any sign. The effort to keep back the agony of her mind was growing almost impossible. She was continually arguing with herself:

"Surely time enough has now been allowed to by. Why did he not fix an exact him?" Now I will write to Capt. Perest: but not what horror to betray his plan had nim ill, if there should be no pased of it! A describings that could not have been foresten may have taken him away. Why did we not talk more fully and arrange all that in advance?"

The long-houed suspense had made here to pale and wan that all noticed it.

"You are not well," said the general, "you are not well," and are not well," and the same.

"You are not well," and the general,

[TO BE CONTINUED.] FIJIAN BREAD.

How the Natives, Manipulate the Fruit of the Breadfust Tree.

The first mention of the breadfust procalls the mustay of the Bounty, whose mission was to transplant this tree from Otalritie, as the early navigators called it, to Jamesca. In his damprous royale in an open boat Blach sailed athyware this Figlat group with a gale regime at his beak. He passed a cance filled with warriors, and as he hurried by the native stood up and pointed to the logan of light to the southward and shorted "My-wellah," but what in the world this may mean the man does not live who can tell. Barked or boiled, the fruit is a starcity, somewhat sticky vegetable, withing earthly resemblance to bread. It differs from the year in that it may not be preserved for future use, but in its natural state must be eaten at cross.
